

TOME VIII — THE SOLSTICE DISCOURSE

Word spoken before the earth, under the Two Row Wampum

EIGHTH PART

The solstice discourse

What the earth hears when I speak — June 21, 2026, Longhouse, Turtle Island

On June 21, 2026, I spoke. Not before a tribunal. Not before a camera. Not to be broadcast. I spoke before the earth, under the solstice sun, at the Longhouse, on Turtle Island. I spoke as one speaks when one knows that speech is an act, not a performance. I spoke as one speaks when one knows that those who listen are not only the visible living, but also the ancestors, the descendants, the stones, the trees, the river.

What follows is the discourse I pronounced that day. It is complete, unchanged. It is the central pillar of this story. It is the moment when breath became word, when choice became act, when silence found its voice.

I begin here today by thanking the Longhouse for receiving me as well as allowing me to express myself, to have listened to me, to have heard me.

I thank the life-givers for their welcome as well as their help, their support.

Welcome and good day to all!

My name is Nabek, son of Carole, grandson of Isabelle, great-grandson of [...]

I do not speak from neutrality. I speak from an unceded land. I speak from Turtle Island on the Tiohtià:ke territory.

You may call it Montreal, in Quebec? in Canada? but these names are labels placed by people who came, who took. Proclamation! "this is ours." We rename everything... Doctrine inked and perpetuated since a pope signed: Where we set foot!!! The doctrine of discovery. The key element of property. That through which everything genocidal passes. We all know the song...

I am a descendant of French colonists. My blood comes from those who arrived on ships, although in my lineage there was, in a distant way, certain links having engendered, I do not claim in any way, nor do I claim, any belonging in any way to identify myself coming from the institution that imposed itself on these lands.

Nine years ago, Kanien'kehá:ka teachers received me, took me by the hand. Not to save me. To show me that I was walking on bones, on words and that I was trampling living treaties.

I learned, I saw and I recognize all the exactions committed against the First Peoples. And I acknowledge them.

The fact that I am here is not a right, it is a presence. And this presence, since 2022, is no longer that of the consenting invader, but that of a conscience. I have renounced the genocidal institution and I do not seek its pardon.

My legitimacy does not come from its laws, from its tribunals, from its subsidies, it comes from the soil, from the water, the air, from the Living.

In 2022, in a ceremony, I said: I am no longer the colon. I withdraw my consent from the machine that kills.

I learned the Two Row Wampum. This treaty of 1616 that says: two canoes, two peoples, one river. Side by side. Neither ahead, nor behind. Peace. Friendship. Respect. No domination. No property. No assimilation.

The Two Row Wampum is not an artifact of the past, but a living law that affirms Indigenous sovereignty and rejects colonial domination. This treaty, concluded according to oral tradition in 1616, was never an act of submission, but a commitment to coexist without erasure. The alliance must last as long as the sun rises, as the rivers flow, and as the grass grows, an eternal promise anchored in nature.

Today, I carry the Wampum as a living oath. My legitimacy comes from my conscience, from the soil, from the water, the air, from the Living and from our commitments.

To wake up is to choose. To choose to no longer be complicit. To choose to walk with the First Peoples rather than against them. To choose to nourish life rather than the machine. To choose speech rather than the fist. To choose the living rather than destruction. To choose dignity rather than illusory security.

The doctrine of discovery, terra nullius, is not dead. It has just once again changed form.

There is a path: the refusal of this system, tax resistance by refusing to sign and pay taxes, creating real alliances with the First Peoples, not to "save" them but to recognize that their lands have never been ceded.

Legal personality, being a citizen, is not a right nor a freedom, it is a conditional privilege to enslavement. The social insurance number, credit, the signature, are tools for submission to the system.

You are not the owner of your own legal identity, you are its hostage, its slave. Like all your goods which are only granted privileges.

I am here today to affirm a position. A position of refusal, of disobedience, of resistance. To definitively end my ties to the institution.

Let us not fool ourselves: when we refuse to pay taxes, when we refuse to participate in war, when we refuse to sign their tacit contract, we become a traitor who must be silenced, seen, eliminated. And here, today, I definitively end this contract. A repudiation of this genocidal institution by the putting to death of my legal personality.

To all, everywhere in the world. Materialize it everywhere. And pursue...

We are not alone. We can reclaim our sovereignty, our food, our currency, our treaties, our memory. We can build together, First Peoples and Quebecers, a life that is not for sale. A life where children are born without poison in their blood, where the earth is cared for not pillaged, where promises are kept not broken.

The reign of poisoning, of war and of profit will collapse, not by violence, but by the refusal of consent. When the hungry beast collapses, it will be life, finally, that is reborn. Not in the shadow of the colon, but in respect, in the sacred, in the bond.

The dominant media demonize resistance, censor speech against genocide, they reveal a structural complicity in this crime against humanity. The entities illegitimately named Canada, Quebec are colonial genocidal institutions, extensions of the said doctrines reigning on these stolen lands.

In colonialism, non-thought and obedience to the State enable spoliation, violence and the erasure of peoples, not by sadism, but by administrative normalization. It is not cruelty, but the banality of obedience, that makes possible the exploitation and destruction of the living, from lands to bodies. The banality of evil is not the absence of gravity, but the banalization of atrocity, blindness, silence. This logic is inscribed in totalitarian regimes where ideology and hierarchy neutralize moral conscience.

The de facto institutions built on domination, by the doctrines must disappear to make way for a relationship founded on justice.

The Two Row Wampum is not a symbol of the past, two peoples, side by side, without interference. It demands the recognition of historical facts, the repair of wrongs, the return of stolen lands and the sovereignty of the First Peoples.

It is up to Quebec and Canada to decolonize themselves. Reconciliation does not come from empty words, but from concrete acts: the withdrawal of extractivist projects, the end of occupation, the respect of oral treaties and the restitution of lands. The tools are there: speech, memory, resistance, the bond to territory.

These territories are not places of the past, but living realities, unceded, usurped, stolen. The voluntary blindness of Quebecers to colonialism perpetuates a system that leads to the collapse of all peoples on this territory, even itself. The media spectacle serves to erase the essential relationship, that between the First Peoples, us, the Two Row Wampum. This includes all political parties without exception. One cannot ask an arm, a colonialist extension, to cut itself off from its own body.

For conscious Quebecers and the Earth. It is this alliance, alone, that can break the unhinged imperialism.

The present generations have the duty to preserve the conditions of future existence, not by exchange, but by intergenerational solidarity. This responsibility is exercised in an ethics of perpetuity: our acts must be compatible with the permanence of an authentically human life on these territories.

No action must compromise the capacity of future generations to live with dignity.

This war against the Earth is a war against ourselves.

The truth is clear: as long as Quebec does not recognize systemic racism, territorial rights and the sovereignty of the First Peoples, it remains a colon, even if it dreams itself a victim. As long as Quebec refuses this truth, it remains prisoner of its own imposture and its disappearance will be not a tragedy, but a consequence of its blindness.

I repudiate the embarkation of the colonial ship, this vessel of death that advances by crushing bodies, memories, territories. To all these friends who tend to truly defend the territory, the cultures, the bonds with the living: if you truly want to be respected you must imperatively become again who you are, who you were before someone decided to name you, decided to name these lands.

If you identify yourself by what they decided and established for you, according to their criteria with their number cards reducing you to become but a simple merchandise inscribed in a trust, I am sorry for you but they have aspired the most fundamental of your essence. It is not an imposed status that defines you, that must define you nor from which you must define yourself, identify yourself. To recognize an imposed status is to recognize submission before the empire.

Two canoes. Two peoples. One river. Mine being that of the colonists, I have chosen to disembark from the ship and to get into a bark canoe, not to lead, only to paddle alongside. To paddle alongside those we are engaged with.

Peace will not come from colonial laws. Nor even from the institutions in place. It will come from the return of the Two Row Wampum. In the remembrance of Quebecers. And in the respect of its commitments.

The Wampum has never been broken, it waits for us to finally choose the right path. It is time now to honor it.

To all this beautiful world who said: The empty lands are ours. Except they were not empty. They were full. Of peoples. Of nations. Of laws. Of life. That you still try today to sweep away. With decrees. Masters in our own house! Or any imbecility that you will invent. I say that: I use here my most constitutional finger to my Freedom of honor!

I am Nabek! Spoken from Turtle Island, under the Two Row Wampum. In the year 410 of the treaty of 1616. 9 days before the 7th full moon.

What the judgments add to this discourse

I say in this discourse that I repudiate the institution, that I put to death my legal personality, that I choose the bark canoe. The judgments, they, trace the legitimacy of this choice in the stone of their own logic.

In 1967, Afroyim v. Rusk (387 US 253) declared that citizen sovereignty is inalienable. It cannot be taken from me. But the inverse is true: I can repudiate it. What is inalienable belongs to the person, not to the State. When I choose to no longer be a citizen, I do not abandon a debt. I recover a breath. I recover my presence. I recover my being.

In 1969, Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham (373 US 262) went further: if the State converts a liberty into a privilege, the citizen can ignore it. The word is there. Ignore. When I withdraw my consent, I do not aggravate an offense. I exercise an option that crime cannot touch. I ignore the fiction. I avert my gaze. I look at the earth. I look at the sky. I look at the living.

In 1871, Miller v. US (78 U.S. 11) said: "The claim and exercise of a constitutional right cannot be converted into a crime." To claim a freedom, to exercise it, cannot be a crime. When I live according to my conscience, when I withdraw my consent, when I cease to pay, when I cease to bow, I do not aggravate an offense. I exercise a freedom that crime cannot reach.

In 1886, Boyd v. US (116 US 616) wrote: to force a man to produce evidence against himself is to violate him. The SIN, taxes, the registry: it is forcing me to produce the evidence of my enslavement. It is forcing me to participate in my own cage. The law knows it. It does it anyway. But it knows it. And I refuse to participate in my own violation. I refuse to sign my chains. I refuse to pay my bondage.

In 1886, Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 US 356) confirmed that the Fourteenth Amendment protects persons. Not corporations. The distinction is there, in the stone. The living on one side. The fiction on the other. And I choose the side of the living. I choose the side of the earth. I choose the side of the river.

In 1970, Brady v. United States (397 US 742, 748) recalled that waivers of constitutional rights must be voluntary and deliberately intelligent, made with sufficient conscience. But I do not renounce. I never consented. I never signed. I never chose to be a citizen. I was registered without being asked. I was numbered before I knew how to speak. I was built a legal personality that I did not authorize. And when I am asked today to renounce, I respond that I do not renounce what never belonged to me. I de-authorize myself. I de-register. I free myself.

In 1966, Miranda v. Arizona (384 US 436) wrote that when rights guaranteed by the Constitution are at stake, there can be no regulation nor any legislation that would abrogate them. But I do not claim their rights. I observe that their rights, even inalienable, are words of the sea. I live on the earth. And on the earth, breath does not need an amendment to exist.

Me, I am.

The Civil Code of Quebec, in its articles 1, 298 and 299, itself traces this boundary: article 1 says that the natural person is born. Article 298 says that the legal person is constituted by an act. To be born is not an administrative act. To be born is. To constitute is to fabricate. It is to construct. It is to invent. And what one invents, one can destroy. What one fabricates, one can undo. What one builds, one can deconstruct.

I am not a construction. I was born of my mother. I am the breath before the number. I am the earth before property. I am the river before the border. And I de-authorize myself. I de-register. I de-identify. I free myself.
